Interactive Data’s Class Actions Service is the professional’s choice to identify and track securities class actions.

These days, no institution can afford to ignore developments in class action securities litigation. Whether your business holds securities as principal or in trust, you have a professional interest and possibly a fiduciary obligation to identify, track, and collect funds that you or your clients may be entitled to.

Tracking securities class actions can be a very cumbersome process. There can be numerous appeals and hearing dates that may take months or even years to resolve, as well as claim forms to be completed. A deadline missed could result in an eligible investor not receiving compensation for damages.

Interactive Data provides various tracking tools to meet your needs, so that monitoring class actions securities litigation is easier to manage.

Best In Class

Interactive Data’s Class Actions Service was specifically designed for institutions wanting to monitor and manage ongoing developments emanating from securities class action litigation. By using our web-based service, access to our detailed database is at your fingertips. The Class Actions Service enables you to identify relevant cases, monitor them, and have the information you need to take action.

Our robust data collection process involves daily monitoring of numerous websites and U.S. periodicals. Some of the sources we utilize to retrieve class actions information include: LexisNexis®, PACER (Public Access to Court Electronic Records, a service of the United States Federal Judiciary), numerous claims administrator sites, plaintiffs’ counsel sites, as well as several online search compilation engines.

With Interactive Data’s Class Actions Service, daily updates to our extensive database are immediately accessible, and universally available to subscribers via a web-based application.
